

Trains are a form of rail transport that move passengers and freight efficiently over long distances. Modern railway systems range from heavy freight networks to high-speed passenger services capable of travelling at hundreds of kilometres per hour. Rail transport is valued for its capacity, safety, and relatively low environmental impact.